Mayor of London

Transport Systems in London (18th May 2020)

Updated lines from the Mayor of London on the use of transport systems across London.

The Mayor of London, Sadiq Khan, said: “We are making real progress on our plans to build up transport services to where they were before the coronavirus pandemic.

Today TfL is running 85% of bus services, 75% of Tube services and 80% of London Overground and DLR services. The Circle line is now in operation and seven Tube stations have reopened. TfL have been working extremely closely with unions for many weeks now on its plans to ramp up services to pre-COVID levels, but have been hampered by having a significant number of staff unable to work frontline staff off sick, self-isolating or shielding.

TfL is making it safer for people who have no alternative but to use public transport by introducing one-way systems and reminding people of the need to stay two metres apart. We are also making sure Londoners know which stations to avoid at what times to make it easier to plan journeys. Over the weekend hand sanitiser points were installed at around 600 locations across the network, with a further 350 points being installed in the next fortnight.

However even when services are running at the highest possible frequency, the need to maintain safe social distancing will dramatically reduce capacity on the Tube to just 13-15%. So, I must urge all Londoners to only use public transport if you have no alternative and to walk or cycle for any essential journeys if you possibly can. You should continue to work from home if you are able to do so.

This morning the Congestion Charge and ULEZ were reintroduced to combat rising traffic levels and stop air pollution worsening. We must prevent a car-based recovery as even if only a small percentage of journeys are shifted to car our roads would immediately become unusably blocked and toxic air pollution would soar. We simply cannot allow one public health crisis to be replaced with another – and we need to ensure emergency vehicles can move around our streets easily as we continue to fight this virus. It's worth remembering that the Congestion Charge zone is about 1 per cent of Greater London – we are talking about a tiny area of our city."

Homelessness Fund (18th May 2020)

Today the Mayor has relaunched the £40m Homelessness Change fund. Providers of homeless hostels and refuges can now bid for funds to make their facilities COVID-19 safe.

Many hostels rely on shared and communal facilities which make self-isolating and social distancing hard. These funds can be used to remodel and redesign existing hostels to slow the spread of the virus between people who are homeless.

Transport for London

Transport Service Levels (18th May 2020)

Transport for London (TfL) will from Monday 18th May, as previously agreed with the Government before the announcement of the lockdown restrictions being lifted, step up public transport service levels to make journeys as safe as possible for people who have no alternative other than to use public transport as national restrictions on movement are carefully and gradually lifted.

The clear advice from the Government and the Mayor is that Londoners should continue to work from home if they can do so. People who cannot work from home are asked to walk or cycle using the existing and extensive new cycling lanes and widened pavements. Londoners should avoid public transport wherever possible.

Statement on Concession Travel (18th May 2020)

"We are still finalising the details around temporary changes to the Freedom Pass, 60+ Oyster card and children's travel in London, as required by the Government as part of the funding deal agreed last week. Once these are agreed we will be fully communicating them to customers before they are implemented. We will be abiding by all statutory requirements and our policy of taking care of vulnerable customers."

London Councils

Updated Lines on Walking & Cycling in London (18th May 2020)

London Councils has issued updated lines on walking and cycling across London as lockdown restrictions ease.

“Due to the impact of the coronavirus pandemic, London boroughs are seeing clear improvements to air quality and traffic levels as fewer people use cars and increasingly make the switch to other forms of travel - such as walking and cycling.

We want to do everything we can to help Londoners sustain this move to cleaner and greener transport as lockdown restrictions ease. Nobody wants to see worsening air pollution and traffic congestion in the capital. London’s boroughs have long been champions of walking and cycling - with many responding to the coronavirus pandemic by introducing emergency measures to support people walking and cycling for essential journeys.

We are urging Londoners who need to travel right now to use cleaner, greener forms of transport such as walking and cycling as their first choice. Cars should only be used where there is no viable alternative, given the walking and cycling infrastructure we have in the capital and the health and environmental benefits of active travel.”

Public Health England

Heathrow Airport Trial (18th May 2020)

Public Health England are working with Heathrow Airport on a limited trial of temperature screening.

A spokesperson for Public Health England said: “PHE has offered to work with London Heathrow airport to help design and evaluate a limited trial of temperature screening to help clarify the evidence for it in a UK setting. This will help to inform the UK response going forward. The UK has not introduced temperature checks at airports as they hold little clinical value as advised by the Government’s expert advisory committee, SAGE. Expert advice is that clinical entry screening would detect a very small number of cases.”
